Description: Short, jet black, spiked hair, with two neon blue, horn-shaped spikes that are about an inch longer than the hair. Thick ponytail on the back of the head, tied by an unknown material, going down the spine, stopping at the ridge of the back. Same colored neon blue stripe on top of the ponytail ending at a point, like the tail itself. Emerald colored eyes with reptilian like pupils, and plain white irises. Scouter-like device with rectangular green lens worn on the right eye. Wearing a thin cobalt colored tactical vest that seems to hug the chest area, with a black sleeveless shirt underneath it made of some form of breathable materiel. Unknown firearm carried by the hip with a hollister. Firearm has a pistol-like appearance. Cobalt fingerless gloves with leather substance on the palms, presumably for extra support with grasping objects. Navy blue pants with the appearance of jeans, though made with a materiel to not constrict to the body. Black combat boots with the top half covered by the pants.

Backround: Helios Ascension. An interdimensional police force who's main priority is to keep peace and tranquility within many different dimensions, and to eliminate any problems that arise for them as well. After finding a dimension with many different timelines, Helios Ascension looked into the problem and found each timeline connected by a single artifact: The SkullHeart. With all other available agents out on the field, they decided to turn to their youngest recruit, Agent K3R. Even at a young age, K3R managed to prove himself by completing missions that would give even the most seasoned of their veterans a difficult time. Having been given three special devices, tasked with the mission of destroying thirteen timelines, and restoring order to the final fourteenth, Helios Ascension's prodigy will have to fight harder than ever before to destroy the burden plaguing the Canopy Kingdom, once and for all.

A/N: This is only a look into what the OC is like. The first chapter will be up soon. One more thing. I've read lots of stories constantly ask the reader to review their fic every chapter. Luckily for you, this is not one of those fics. However, I will only ask this once. Please, review my story. I'm not forcing you to do it, and you can choose to not review at all. However, it would really help since this is the first fic I've written on this site. So, if you ever have the time, go ahead and leave one. It would make my day.

CTS: Chapter 1

Within the Catacombs of the Grand Cathedral, an extraordinary battle had taken place just moments ago. The Skullgirl has been defeated by a very unlikely hero: a cat-like, humanoid robot. However, the current savior of the Canopy Kingdom was contemplating the endless circle of wishing upon the Skull Heart.

"No matter what wish is made, the tradgedy of the Skull Heart will be repeated. Destroying the Skull Heart only resets the seven-year cycle..." the metalic cat-woman said in a dull, robotic tone. Suddenly, she somehow made a Cheshire-like smile. "Luckily, my creator's plans have taken this into account."

"Oh?" questioned the SkullHeart. "Are you sure his flawed, human decision-making won't ruin anything along the way?"

The Robot seemed to hesitate taking any futher action after hearing the heart's statement, thinking about what to do next. Without any warning, it started trembling in place as blue sparks of electricity coursed through its body. "Meowfunction! Meowfunction! Shutting down..." The bot dropped to the floor, powered off and unmoving as smoke wafted through a hole on its back.

"Sorry Robo, nothing personal. But I'll see you again in the next timeline, anyways." Standing directly behind the disabled machine was a young man with black spiked hair, and a long ponytail tied behind his head. He had a cobalt colored vest on, with the depiction of a small golden sun with wings spread out on the front-left, and a large 'HA-K3R' on the back. He also seemed to have had some form of taser, before tossing it aside.

"What!? How DARE you interfere with the matters of The Tri-" Before the Skull Heart could finish, the boy took it and stomped it repeatedly beneath his feet.

"Yeah, yeah. I've already heard the same story before, so save it." He brushed himself off as the aura of the Skull Heart dissipated.

"chrck Report, K-Three-R! Did you eliminate the targets?" a deep, gruff voice suddenly spoke.The voice seemed to be coming from the scouter on the teenager's, now known as K3R's, right eye.

"Yeah," answered K3R, "it's a shame, too. Robo-Fortune could have ruled the internet with an iron fist."

"Now's not the time for messing around." responded the voice, "Destroy the timeline, I'll set up a wormhole to the next one."

"Got it." K3R cut off communication with his comrade. "At least I don't have to kill off any more people. Not counting this." He put his hand to the side of his scouter and pressed a button. A hologram of a large inventory screen blinked to life a few feet away from him. He navigated the screen until the cruisor was over the words "ANTENNA Z". He pressed another button, and the inventory screen faded, replacing it with a device materialized into his hands.

It was a machine roughly the size of a pen, colored red with a skull engraved into it. It had two buttons on it: a large black one, and a medium sized pink one. He pointed the device across the room and pressed the black button. A dark ball of distorted mass shot out of the device and stayed in the air, with a light vaccuming sound being heard from it. K3R put his palm to the side of the scouter, while the pen-sized device dissapeared with an explosion of tiny cyan-colored pixels. "Alright, Havoc. All set."

"chrck How many times have I told you to not call me that!?" said the newly named Havoc, annoyed.

"Enough times to make me not care."

"Well, stop doing it anyway!" Immediately after saying that, a blue swirling portal appeared nearby K3R.

"You set it to send me BEFORE the attack on the tower, right?", questioned the young agent.

"Yes, just like planned.", responded Havoc.

"Alright. Here goes nothin'" K3R walked towards the portal and stepped through it. After doing so, the portal closed behind him. During the two's short conversation, the black mass had grown to a massive size, practically filling the entire room, while inhaling many objects within it and tearing apart the walls with it's suction. And it was still growing at an alarming rate.

It was a lightly cloudy day in New Meridian. Many humans, Dagonians, and Ferals went about their day, while a large blimp slowly and lazily flew over the city. However, no one seemed to notice the large amount of sparks crackling on the rooftops. The sparks intensified until they formed a portal, and K3R stepped out of it. As the portal closed behind him, he carefully took a look around him before nodding to himself. Then, he once again put his palm to the scouter. "I made it."

"Good." answered Havoc, "Do you remember the protocol for this timeline, K-Three-R?"

"Hacker." said K3R, "It's. Hacker. K-Three-R is too much work to say. Calling me Hacker is easier."

"Answer the question." responded Havoc, brushing off Hacker's statement.

The newly named Hacker sighed in iritation. "Yes. I have. Don't kill any of the past targets, keep said targets alive, and only eliminate for the Skull Heart." As he said this he navigated through his Inventory and materialized three objects. The first was the golden device from before. However, the second was a nearly excact replica of the first device, except it was colored blue, had a circle engraved instead of a skull, and instead of black and pink, it had purple and yellow buttons on it. The third also looked similar to the two, but instead was colored green, had a plus engraved on it, and had only a single white button, unlike its two-buttoned counterparts. "Also, solve any minor problems that come up in between."

"Exactly. I've sent you a day and a half before the Skullgirl attacks New Meridian. If you remember correctly, the attack occurs at around 12:30 a.m. tommorow, so that should give you enough time to correct the problems between it. I suggest you warn Lab 8 of the attack on their lab, first." explained Havoc, while Hacker dismissed the three devices.

_'Well, because of the amount of time I've spent around here, I know my way around. I can get to Lab 8 in no time. Lucky me.' _thought Hacker, "Okay. Thanks, Havoc."

"For the umpteenth time, it's NOT 'Havoc'!" yelled Havoc. Hacker reeled back from the volume of his tone, "You will refer to me as V-Zero-C! That's an order from your superior officer! Show some respect to the people above your rank!"

"Whatever, nerd." Hacker cut the link between them before Havoc could respond. "One of these days, he's going to make my ears bleed 'cause of his shouting."

Looking up, Hacker overlooked New Meridian from his position on the rooftops. The sun shined down on the streets, bathing many of the buildings and citizens in its warmth. Its rays bounced off the Medici Tower's windows, making it shine and seem like a beacon of light to Helios Ascencion's youngest operative. He grinned at the sight.

With his moral renewed, Hacker dashed as quickly as he could towards The Anti-Skullgirl Labs.
